THE ATHABASKA VALLEY

VALLEYS are as different as people. There are little, secluded valleys, with, perhaps, a brook where fish lurk in the shadowy waters; there are valleys frankly pastoral. In the Canadian Rockies the narrow valley, with its tempestuous mountain torrent and its towering crags, is in decided contrast to the broad valley with its swift-rushing river widening into vividly coloured lakes, and its snow-crested peaks rising in stately grandeur. Most charming of broad valleys is the Athabaska, with the town of Jasper situated in the heart of picturesque and romantic beauty.

Nowadays when we skim over beautiful roadways, or ride in lazy, happy mood over the strangely fascinating trails to be found throughout Jasper National Park (4,400 square miles), we are apt to lose sight of those olden days when, with infinite labour, the old fur traders and Indians used the Athabaska Pass. One may take a comfortable, swift motor, or better still, a sure-footed mountain pony, and drawing rein may, from the "hurrican deck of the cayuse," gaze over the wonderland of mountains, lakes and rivers. So might an Indian have sat, watching with steady eye, the oncoming brigade of the fur traders. Toiling upstream along the Athabaska, from Jasper's House, they come. At the junction of the Miette some Indians break from the party. They are bound for the Leather Pass (Yellow-head) with their stock of dressed skins, to trade with the tribes beyond the summit where leather is scarce. The main party continues up the Athabaska, now on the river itself, now struggling over rocky bars, fording the foaming green water, crossing and re-crossing the turbulent stream and sometimes taking to the woods at difficult places. Beyond the shining crest of Mount Edith Cavell they rest and camp at the Committee's Punch Bowl, a tiny alpine tarn overshadowed by beetling cliffs. Daylight finds them on their way again, overcoming all obstacles. Hardy, sturdy men of the North West Company and the Hudson's Bay Company. we salute you!

Motoring to Mount Edith Cavell—Panoramic view of Athabasca Valley.

JASPER PARK LODGE

The wise traveller arriving in Jasper from the east will be up early. The Canadian National skirts Brule and Jasper Lakes, great expansions of the Athabasca River. Across the blue waters, the rocky ranges may, in the early morning, have a sprinkling of snow which soon disappears, for the Athabasca is a warm valley swept by soft chinooks. The most outstanding peak is Roche Miette of the Miette Range, whose fortress-like crest is seen for many miles and has been for all pioneers a landmark of renown. Steel-grey, the pinnacles of the Colin Range lift themselves to pierce the blue sky, but one is almost immediately attracted by a great snow-capped mountain far to the south. It is the first glimpse of Mount Edith Cavell, the Queen of the Athabasca.

The traveller arrives in Jasper from the west, over the famous Yellowhead Pass (the lowest transcontinental railroad grade in America). From the narrow valley of the winding Miette, the vast sweep of the Athabasca is a revelation. Behind the town Mount Pyramid rears his head, like the multicolored turban of some oriental magician. Whistlers Mountain stands guard on the south west.

The motor speeding over the three-mile drive to Jasper Park Lodge affords ample time to sense the exhilaration of the crisp morning air and stimulating breath of those white peaks. Should the arrival be in the evening, the old man outstretched on the top of Roche Bonhomme is fast asleep. As the sun sinks, the rosy pink of the alpen glow touches, here and there, the snowy summits of vast mountains. Over perfect roads with ever-changing vistas, one is driven to Jasper Park Lodge. Twinkling lights through the pines beckon to a spot of singular beauty, unspoiled and yet enhanced by all the charm and comfort of the Lodge. The gleaming lights, reflected in Lac Beauvert's placid waters and piercing the night's wooded blackness, cast a rare enchantment. It remains only for a courteous reception, resembling a long-expected homecoming, the porter's friendly announcement "move your watch forward one hour," for the new arrival to at once feel the genial hospitality of Jasper Park Lodge.

The commodious lounge is an unusually fine example of rustic architecture, while the furnishings are comfort personified. Logs blazing merrily in a huge open fireplace, built of boulders from the nearby glacial streams, cast their cheer to the farthest corners. An immense beaver-cut log converted into a mail box arrests the eye. The strains of music tell that an orchestra must have been specially selected for its ability to interpret the best of composers.

rows of bungalows. The thirty-seven centrally heated bungalows, gay with flowers, contain a sittingroom with writing desk, bedrooms with private baths, hot and cold water, electric light and telephone. One may have a single cabin de luxe, a family cabin with two or four bedrooms, or a room in one of the larger bungalows containing ten and twelve rooms. All the bungalows have wide verandahs. With the baggage delivered and clothes hanging in the wardrobe, the visitor may return to the main lodge.

As the lounge appeals to the eye so does the diningroom, for here is the same rustic architecture in complete harmony with the whole of the main building. Here meals can be served at one sitting to some 600 guests, and visitors to Jasper Park Lodge carry away with them recollections of the chef's achievement in the culinary art. The main lodge contains bedrooms with and without baths, and the spacious verandah, with its comfortable chairs, lounges and marvellous outlook over lake and mountain, is a favourite rendezvous for the guests. Here five o'clock tea is served.

In the lounge tourists congregate from the ends of the earth and breathe the cordial spirit characteristic of mountaineers. Animated conversation reminiscent of the trail, mountain folklore, legend and story attract curious groups and afford unusual merriment. Then, one of the charming hostesses graciously intrudes and escorts willing guests to the bridge tables or to the recreation hall where dancing is in full swing. Good-will pervades through the evening at Jasper Park Lodge.

Before retiring one instinctively lingers on the verandah. What a night it is! The towering firs intensify the darkness, yet there is a shimmering on Lac Beauvert. The stars fill the heavens with a million brilliants, but the shadowed dome of the Whistlers obscures the western sky. Southward, the softened whiteness of Edith Cavell's snow-crowned summit gleams serenely. A resolve is made to witness sunrise in Jasper. The story of the bear in Jasper National Park is known, but the deer among the trees on the peninsula below the bungalows is a pleasant surprise and so also are the beaver plying a rapid course in the lake.

The morning walk reveals the fact that Jasper Park Lodge is, in reality, a rustic village on Lac Beauvert (beautiful green), one of those mountain lakes the colour of whose water is so elusive—now green, now blue, and shot with the breeze, the lake is never the same. Early in the morning, when the wind is still, one may see a picture of exquisite loveliness when Mount Edith Cavell is mirrored in majestic beauty.

JASPER PARK LODGE In the heart of the ~
CANADIAN ROCKIES

The broad verandah of the Lodge.

The same architecture of this group of buildings prevails throughout, the material used being the gift of logs from the mountain slopes and boulders from the glacial swept basin.

Early, the Lodge is enlivened, trail riders, motorists, hikers, dressed in suitable apparel, scurry hither and thither to keep appointments for an early start. Golfers, tennis players and those who enjoy bathing and canoeing are busy with the day's schedule. Tourists with cameras are enthused over the prospect of a perfect day, while others elect the quiet of those comfortable verandahs and a chance to think under the magic spell of nature's sublime achievements.

On the shore of Lac Beauvert, and but a step from the Lodge, lies the new and inviting swimming pool, with its crystal clear water, filtered, heated and constantly changing. Adjacent also are the excellent tennis courts where many pleasant hours may be spent. "En tout cas" top dressing makes them the equal of the finest championship courts.

GOLF AMID THE MOUNTAINS

The seemingly impossible has been accomplished, a perfect eighteen-hole golf course amongst the inspiring and majestic mountains. If the old Scot, Colin

JASPER PARK LODGE In the heart of the ~ CANADIAN ROCKIES

Fraser (postmaster at Jasper in 1840) could stand on some rocky crest of the Colin Range, he would rub his eyes in wonder.

The first tee and eighteenth green, side by side, are so conveniently close to the Lodge buildings and natural features have been so skilfully used that, now that the work is done, it seems obvious that there was no other route than the one taken for the course; but when the areas used were covered with mountain forest, thick underbrush, rough brule and slash, poplar-swamp or boulder-farm (under prolific crop) the route was anything but clear, and the very best skill as a path finder had to be displayed by the golf architect.

Care has been taken to tie up the tees, greens and bunkers to the surrounding physical features in a way that seldom suggests artificiality. There is a sweep to the fairways and the moulding of bunkers has been done so skilfully that no harsh lines appear and the pleasing contours of the greens flow into the fairways with graceful natural slopes. It will be observed from the card that there is a fine range of lengths of holes calling for shots of all kinds and in interesting combinations; that the holes are arranged in a sequence which gives pleasing variety of play. Each hole has a character of its own and all are practically individual in their situation. There is no actual paralleling although the fifth and sixth fairways are adjacent to the tenth.

JASPER PARK LODGE In the heart of the
CANADIAN ROCKIES

The filtered waters of the Swimming Pool are heated and constantly changing.

There is little thick rough, so that ball hunting is almost unknown. The visibility of all shots to the green is a special feature to which there is but one interesting exception.

Three tees are regularly set up at each hole so that those desiring to avoid great length can play from the front tees. The fairways are of ample width. No impossible carries are required from the tee, but there is nearly always an advantage to be obtained by the player who can place a bold shot. The bunkers are well in evidence and, while large, they are fair and not unduly numerous. The walks between holes have been cut down to a minimum, and there is little climbing to reach high tees, or in play.

The long light evenings at Jasper offer unique fascination to the golfer who hesitates to "call it a day." After the sun has faded in the crimson glory beyond the skyline of the Miette Range during the summer, play is possible until 10.00 p.m.

Jasper is destined to be one of the great golfing resorts of the world. It cannot be surpassed, and it is doubtful if circumstances elsewhere ever combined so agreeably as to permit of the Jasper golf course being equalled in beauty of surroundings or character of golfing terrain. The second Saturday of September brings the commencement of Jasper Golf week, attracting players from all parts of North America, who compete for the unique totem pole trophy, a silver totem pole guarded by four bears. This is held for one year by the club of which the winning player is a member, the player receiving a smaller replica.

MALIGNE CANYON

In the trench formed by the Colin and Maligne Ranges flows the Maligne River, a small but spectacular stream. Its headwaters are the lovely Maligne Lake, a glorious sheet of water encircled by glacier hung peaks and one of the most exquisite lakes in all the Canadian Rockies. Flowing from Maligne Lake and widening again into Medicine Lake, the river issues in a rather small stream which forces its way to the Athabaska. In reality most of the water is conveyed by a subterranean channel. About a mile and a half from its confluence with the Athabaska is the interesting and marvelous Maligne Canyon, of which no description or photograph is adequate. The walls of the canyon, fifty to one hundred feet, are fifteen to twenty feet apart, but in some places the walls are almost touching, being held apart by giant boulders. Bridges have been built across the canyon, from which one may study the grey walls sculptured by the water. Several waterfalls add to the charm. This remarkable phenomenon is nine miles from the Lodge and is a favorite side trip.

GLACIER OF THE ANGEL (Mt. Edith Cavell) DRIVE

Leaving Jasper Park Lodge, on a perfect roadway, it follows a slender avenue through firs and spruce, skirting the shores of Lac Beauvert where beaver may be seen if one chances by in the early morning or late evening. After crossing the Athabaska River, one may perchance see, up the dusty trail to the left, black or brown bears or, as the Twin Lakes are passed, Bruin may be glimpsed enjoying his daily dip.

The drive crosses the Miette River where it empties into the Athabaska River and continues up the Athabaska Valley, gradually ascending Whistlers and Marmot Mountains. Meanwhile, it bridges several torrents that come frolicking down from the higher altitudes in right good spirit. Portal Creek drains Circus Valley and guides the trail-rider through The Portal on his way to the Tonquin Valley where the Ramparts lift their embattled bulwarks defiantly. The Ramparts form the backbone of the Rockies and keep watch over the superb Amethyst Lakes.

After crossing the Miette, the ascending drive affords an increasing view of the Athabasca Valley attaining its zenith so high above the Astoria that the river below appears like a tiny rill. The broad forested basin of the valley spreads to amazing proportions. Down its centre, the Athabasca resembles a silver cord glistening in the sunlight. Across the valley, the Maligne Mountains hold their naked grey forms defiantly erect. Tekarra, Amber, Curator and Antler Mountains are in the foreground, while an infinite variety of mountains display themselves selves in the background of this vast pageantry of Alpine scenery.

Where the drive turns abruptly on the mountain's brow, the chauffeur courteously stops the motor and you step out to snap the "hoodoos," freakish formations of irregular upright pillars, each capped with a boulder, and left standing by the receding clay bank. Across the valley, on the steep incline you may see mountain goats, unless you are there at midday when the goats recline in sheltered clefts.

At the end of the drive, the speedometer registers some eighteen miles and you have ascended 2,300 feet to an altitude of 5,770 feet. You think you have climbed considerably higher. Cavell Lake lies kennelled at the base of Mount Sorrow, lifting its sombre cliffs perpendicularly erect. A short walk over the boulder-strewn moraine and you may climb up the slippery sides of Cavell Glacier.

There, immediately in front, stands the superb mountain itself. Edith Cavell, with an altitude of 11,033 feet, serenely dominates the entire setting, its white turbaned head glistening in the sun. In the cirque where Cavell Mountain touches shoulders with Mount Sorrow, the two outstretched wings of Glacier of the Angel spread themselves. Midway, where the wings meet, the glacier cascades 500 feet over the precipice, forming the phantom creature's body. Thence, the glacier expands in larger proportions, crowding, a mile down the valley. Its surface is strewn with pieces of rock from the cliffs above and yawning crevasses display their transparent green sides.

The return journey follows the same route back to the Lodge. With the changing light new beauties are discovered, and glimpses of this, one of the finest of the continent's scenic drives, are "fixed" sharply to remain as lifelong memories.

The Glacier of the Angel Drive is but one of the motor roads that thread the valley, and, beautiful as it is, it affords only a foretaste of the magnificence lying in

There is good fishing in Jacques Lake.

Probably no district in the Rockies contains more interesting scenery.

Maligne Lake, crystal clear, is some nineteen miles in length, hemmed by virgin forest, unspoiled by fire and from whose shores the lower reaches of a splendid group of high mountains rise precipitously for thousands of feet, terminating in summits heavily laden with snow and ice.

In nearly every basin lies a glacier and near the south-eastern end of the lake, easily accessible, lies a considerable ice field and snow pass leading to the south.

The nature of the country in the vicinity of Maligne Lake affords abundant opportunity for both rock and ice climbing and for the amateur many comparatively easy climbs may be planned.

The Alpine flowers and park lands of the low summits lying to the west, and within easy reach from the main camp, will prove of great interest to both the botanist and the photographer.

Sheep, goat and caribou graze in these pastures.

Every effort has been made to render the main camp at the northern end of the lake comfortable and satisfactory.
